The graphic style is partly inspired by the masterful pop art creations of the '60s, but more by the dinosaurs and robots of the '80s. Act 1 5 Performers, 27 Mixed Media Objects The Walker is a fusion of literature, cinema, puppetry and live performance, inspired by the Max Ernst painting of Ernst mit dem Wanderer. Max Ernst was a surrealist artist who worked with the surrealist painter André Breton. He created a series of paintings in which anthropomorphs are seen amidst realistic settings and landscapes. In one of these paintings, called The Man and the Walker, the main protagonist is shown looking out at a landscape, holding a stick in his hand. In one hand there's a leash on a monstrous dog-like creature, and in the other a stick, which is pointed against the animal. In real life, the protagonist stands on top of this dog, and holds on to its leash with his free hand. In the painting, the very meaning of a leash is being strained, and in the real world one of its functions is to control the movements of man's best friend. The Man and the Walker – Max Ernst The Dog Man The term 'Dog Man' refers to a figure in a number of mythologies and fables. In these stories, he is a man-like creature who has given himself over to the life of a dog, with the assistance of a leash, on a leash, and a stick. According to Irish legend, the Dog Man (called the Wendel) lives with his dog in a cave beneath a mountain on the island of Inishturk. At night, the Dog Man rises from the
